INTRODUCTION

A terse little article by R. E. Barlow, in number 2 of the ACOLYTE started me, in 1945, on the compilation of a bibliography of the amateur works of H. P. Lovecraft. Now, ten years later, it sees print in these pages.

To the persons who were of aid in this prolonged labor I would like to offer my sincere thanks; to Leon Stone, of Australia, who possesses some 1500 Amateur Journals, and facilitated my researches considerably; to the Lovecraft fancier, Jack Grill, for information from his outstanding collection of Lovecraftiana; to the librarian at Princeton University who listed all HPL items in Fantasy Fan; to Robert E. Briney who assumed the compilation of professional works when the original researcher was put in a position to make the task impossible; to August Derleth of Arkham House;and to the many others who, in large measure or small, served to mitigate my arduous labors* which were so often disappointing and discouraging.

George T. Wetzel

Dundalk, Maryland
30 June 1955

* A qualification of my characterizing these labors as "arduous" is to be found in my preface to these bibliographies, "The Research of a Biblio", in Howard Phillips Lovecraft: Memoirs, Critiques, & Bibliographies, SSR Publications, 1955.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

Thanks must here be rendered to all those without whom this bibliography could never have been published. There are first the indefatigable bibliographers and indexers upon whose work we have drawn for so much of our data: Bradford M. Day, Donald E. Day, Earl Kemp, T. G. L. Cockroft, Joseph Payne Brennan, William Evans, and Francis T. Laney.

In addition, there are the many people whose expenditure of time and effort in supplying or helping us obtain information has been of invaluable aid. Among these we must mention Robert Bloch, Henry Kuttner, Clark Ashton Smith, August Derleth, Ralph Rayburn Phillips, Earl Kemp, Bea Mahaffey, and Al Leverentz.

Note: The symbol (*) indicates that the story had previous publication elsewhere; the majority of the titles so marked originally appeared in various amateur magazines to which Lovecraft contributed, and will be found in the amateur press listing furnished earlier in this volume.

The dates in parenthesis following certain titles indicates the year in which the stories were originally written. In many cases publication dates differ from these by several years.

Titles marked with an asterisk (*) are poems in Lovecraft's sonnet cycle Fungi From Yuggoth. A complete chronological listing of these poems will be found in Appendix II.

This index does not include poems published in newspapers, of which there were a considerable number, especially in Lovecraft's earlier years. The majority of these were patriotic poems, or elegies on the deaths of friends, and appeared in The Providence News, and other local papers, ca. 1916-19.

 The version of the "Commonplace Book" which appears here differs somewhat from that printed by R. H. Barlow, 1938. August Derleth observes, "...differences between the published texts of HPL's Commonplace Book may be due to various factors, 1) an incomplete text sent us by Barlow 2) the interpolation of some of Barlow's own notes into the Commonplace text; 3) secretarial errors in copying. To the best of my recollection, we had access both to H. P. L.'s original and to one of the Barlow copies, and our edition was undoubtedly made from the original rather than a copy."

The Faceless God	Weird Tales	May	1936

"The tales indicated by an asterisk are, in my opinion, definitely within the 'Cthulhu classification'....insofar as they embrace Lovecraftian concepts, are based on the Cthulhu mythos, or have a sufficient background of allusion to be considered a part of the pattern. To this you might possibly add 'Fane of the Black Pharaoh', because of its allusions to 'The Faceless God' and similar material. Actually, though, this tale is part of the entire 'Egyptian series'. The other stories also contain stylistic elements similar to HPL's work." —Robert Bloch (December 30, '52)

"It's hard to say, now, which stories of mine were influenced by Lovecraft fifteen years ago— especially as I was also influenced then by Machen, Poe, Dunsany, Robert E. Howard, and for that matter, James Cain and Ray Chandler. But the stories abover were all influenced by Lovecraft. Some used the Cthulhu Mythos, some used a myth-system extrapolated from his, some didn't mention the mythos at all but were nevertheless strongly influenced by H P L. 'Hydra' used Lovecraft, Robert Bloch, and me, under assumed names, as characters." —Henry Kuttner (January 11, 1953)

The Weird of Avoosl Wuthoqqan	Weird Tales	June	1932

"As to the Cthulhu Mythos, I believe I added about as much to it as I borrowed. Tsathoggua and the Book of Eibon were my creations, and were promptly utilized by Lovecraft. In turn, I borrowed the Necronomicon, which, in its original Arabic, was featured in my yarn The Return of the Sorcerer. Also, I used a quotation from the Necronomicon for a heading on another tale, The Nameless Offspring. Tsathoggua made his debut in The Tale of Satampira Zeiros, and also played some part in The Door to Saturn and The Seven Geases. The Coming of the White Worm was supposedly a chapter from the Book of Eibon; and the book also featured in Ubbo-Sathla and in The Holiness of Azederac (which latter story mentioned two Lovecraftian deities under the slightly altered names of Iog- Sotot and Kthulhut). Eibon himself entered prominently into The Door of Saturn. All of these underlined titles, then, can be considered as having more or less relationship to the Cthulhu Mythos. —Clark Ashton Smith (July 21, 1953).

ARTICLES ABOUT H. P. LOVECRAFT

Note: Some arbitrariness in the following list will be apparent. Since the amount of material which comes under the above heading is so overwhelming, and from such diverse sources, completeness is virtually impossible. Thus many items have undoubtedly been missed. Others, primarily letters in various letter columns, or articles from fan-magazines which are mere repetitions of material available elsewhere, have been omitted intentionally. Still others, listed elsewhere in this index as parts of other books or collections, have been omitted in the interests of conciseness. All possible attempts have been made to include material of genuine critical value or material which makes available information not obtainable in other forms.

-Lovecraft's Astronomical Articles-

Lovecraft was the author of at least two regularly appearing series of articles on astronomical subjects which appeared in newspapers. The first of these was a series of monthly articles ("of about 7p. ms. or 4p type") in the Providence Evening Journal, beginning January 1, 1914.

The second was a series entitled "Mysteries of the Heavens Revealed by Astronomy," which appeared in the Asheville (N.C.) Gazette-News, beginning February 16, 1915, and appearing every Tuesday and Saturday thereafter for approximately six weeks. Fourteen parts were announced, although the twice-a-week schedule varied slightly after the first ten installments.

ERRATA: Professional Works and Miscellany {bibliography}

NOTE: This list corrects errors, typographical and otherwise, appearing in the "professional" portion of the HPL bibliography originally published in The Lovecraft Collectors Library, Volume VII, and in HPL: MEMOIRS, CRITIQUES & BIBLIOGRAPHIES (1955). No attempt has been made to fill in omissions in the original bibliography, or to bring it up to date. This has been done more than adequately by other hands.

---R. E. Briney [15 January 1976]

PROFESSIONALLY PUBLISHED MAGAZINE FICTION

At the Mountains of Madness - publication dates should be Feb/Mar/Apr 1936
Dream Quest of Unknown Kadath - published in Arkham Sampler, not Weird Tales
The Dreams in the Witch-House (omitted from original list) - Weird Tales Jly 1933
The Dunwich Horror - publication date should be Apr 1929
Herbert West: Reanimator - the first publication of this series, in Home Brew, appeared under the title "Growsome Stories", not "Herbert West: Reanimator."
